

Jacques L. Delamarre

October 16, 1933 ~ November 29, 2023

Sara I am so sorry to hear of Jacques' passing! He was one of my favorite bosses and friend from EIMCO. He had such a fun personality that always made me laugh - from his funny hats to his antics in the office. He also helped us feed a group of feral cats that lived under the offices and in the storage area. He was indeed one of the good guys and will be sorely missed!

- Lorraine Whalen

I met Jack in 1997 when I worked alongside him as a guest services agent at the Holiday Inn Downtown in Salt Lake City. after I had recently moved to Salt Lake City from Las Vegas, NV. Always upbeat, quick-witted, and funny, while at the same time also an very encouraging and sincere individual, Jack was a unique person whose style and panache rarely, if ever, failed to charm the hotel's patrons as well as his fellow employees. Although I only worked with Jack for a little over a year at the Holiday Inn Downtown (and left Salt Lake City in 1999 after having lived there only two years), Jack and I established a rapport that lasted for over 25 years thereafter, and we would keep in keep in contact by phone regardless of how far from Salt Lake City my adventures in life took me. Jack was just that kind of a guy. He made a lasting positive impression on people, and was the quintessence of definition of good company - a person who is pleasant and entertaining to be with. Jack will surely be missed. My sincere condolences to his wonderful, pleasant and, likewise, charming wife Sara.

- Tony Stewart

I met Jack in 1997 when I worked alongside him as a guest services agent at the Holiday Inn Downtown in Salt Lake City. after I had recently moved to Salt Lake City from Las Vegas, NV. Always upbeat, quick-witted, and funny, while at the same time also a very encouraging and sincere individual, Jack was a unique person whose style and panache rarely, if ever, failed to charm the hotel's patrons as well as his fellow employees. Although I only worked with Jack for a little over a year at the Holiday Inn Downtown (and left Salt Lake City in 1999 after having lived there only two years), Jack and I established a rapport that lasted for over 25 years thereafter, and we would keep in contact by phone regardless of how far from Salt Lake City my adventures in life took me. Jack was just that kind of a guy. He made a lasting positive impression on people, and was the quintessence of the definition of good company - a person who is pleasant and entertaining to be with. Jack will surely be missed. My sincere condolences to his wonderful, pleasant and, likewise, charming wife Sara.

- Tony Stewart