I'm so sorry to hear this. Bryce and I were best childhood friends. I'll never forget the countless days we rode our bikes around the neighborhood and eventually ended up back at his house to watch a movie in the basement. I have so many good memories with him. He will be missed.

I had the privilege of working alongside Bryce for the past eight years. In that time, I saw firsthand what an incredible, dependable, and truly irreplaceable person he was. He carried his department with strength, consistency, and a quiet confidence that made everything look easy. Stepping into his role feels less like filling in and more like realizing just how big his shoes truly were. I joke that I am only messing up his department trying to wear them, but the truth is that Bryce set a standard that is hard to match. He cared deeply about his work and the people around him, and it showed every single day. He was more than a coworker. He was someone you could count on without question. He will be deeply missed, and I am grateful for the years I had the chance to work beside him.

- Krystal Huntsman (Co-worker)

I was sorry to hear about Bryce's passing. He was a friend and an incredible person to share adventures with. I will always treasure the memories of our trips to So Utah, camping in remote places and exploring slot canyons. Those moments meant more to me than he probably knew. My heart goes out to all who loved him. Bryce will always be remembered for his kindness, generosity, and the way he made every experience better just by being there. Deepest sympathies, Jesse

I will never forget saying goodbye to you before I left on my mission. I was on my way to the MTC in Provo and stopped by your house, hoping I might catch you for a quick goodbye. You smiled and said, "Who knows—maybe someday you'll see me on a mission." Well Bryce, I believe that day has come. I once heard something during a dark time in my life that brought me great peace: We cannot claim to believe in God, in His goodness, and in the reality of heaven—and then only mourn when someone we love returns to live with Him. If we truly believe, then we trust that being called home to His presence is not a loss, but a sacred homecoming. And while our hearts ache because we miss them, we can also rejoice for them. I love you, Bryce. I look forward to the day we meet again.

This has been one of the hardest losses I have experienced. Since I found out about Bryce's passing, I couldn't express myself because I didn't want to accept or process it. Being the youngest aunt I had more in common with my nieces and nephews than their parents. Many of them felt more like my younger siblings because I was closer in age to them than their parents. The day of the funeral service I didn't get a chance to watch the video and it was so touching and beautiful. My heart goes out to all who have felt the impact and tragedy of this loss. He had so much zest for life and all of the pictures of the places he loved to spend time in nature resonate deeply for me from my home state. I tell my children my heart lives in that natural wonder. I hope in retirement I will get pass through it more often. To my sister Diane, her husband Brent and all their family and all the lives Bryce touched my deepest sympathies. I'm not sure Lisa ever ends but we can carry more lightly as we continue on. I know how I will remember Bryce and he was funny and kind and willing to help. His smile lives in my memory. Be at peace.
