Paul loved the outdoors, especially Yellowstone, fishing its many streams and rivers with family members. Backpacking in the Uintah mountains with each child and then each grandchild - cherished memories. Family was most important to Paul and building relationships with each child and grandchild, which included riding in his motor home to Lake Powell and other places, Fourth of July family reunions at his condo in Park City, skiing, boating, hiking, hunting, and golfing.

Paul was a faithful member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. His testimony was strengthened while serving for 14 years in the Salt Lake Temple.
