I was one of Trevor's coworkers of about 3 years. He was always a very nice and loving individual. I remember days when I would disappear into the back of the store and talk to him about politics, religion, and the way of the world for much longer than I should've. But that wasn't unique to me. Everyone loved to talk to him. He was the type of person you could have big conversations with, without someone's feelings getting hurt in the process. He was always very open minded and curious with me and my coworkers. He was wonderful to talk to. As I moved throughout the company I saw him less and less often, but whenever our paths crossed it would brighten my day. He was a wonderful human with a beautiful soul. The energy of our workplace is no longer the same. The world was better for having him, and he will be missed dearly by all of us who worked with him.
