Doug loved his children. He spoke of Douglas, Justin and Michelle tenderly. He often expressed how proud he was of his \"good kids\" and their accomplishments. To his nieces and nephews he was the epitome of the fun uncle. On family trips to Bear Lake, he was always organizing activities, planning every day with hikes, ping pong tournaments and target shooting. One was never bored when Doug was around. He was an original, a unique individual. His personality was infectious and everyone loved to be with him. Doug had his own brand of humor. A close friend described it as \"ingeniously witty and fall down laughing, irreverently funny.\" Doug also expressed his humor through his innate ability to draw, especially caricature and political commentary. He made each person feel important, engaging them with personal questions that would spark interesting conversation. Doug loved our beautiful Utah mountains and was an avid hiker and adventurer. He had no fear and often went alone on these adventures leaving us asking the question, \"Has anyone heard from Doug?\" Doug loved history and traveling to historical sites in America and abroad, especially battlefields.
