While working for the FBI in Los Angeles, he attended Southwestern Law School obtaining his law degree. He retired From the FBI after 24 years of service and then opened his own law practice in Salt Lake City.

He was a very self-motivated person. He was always learning new things and taking up new hobbies from auto mechanics to wood turning to fly fishing, but his favorite pastime in his retired years was fishing with all his buddies. For 25 years he coached Little League football, having a positive influence on many young men.

Lee was an active member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He served in many callings, but his favorite was working with the youth. He worked in the Draper, Utah, Temple for ten years and often remarked that it was a wonderful experience.

He married his high school sweetheart, Marlene Black, on September 7, 1961, in the Salt Lake Temple. They were blessed with four beautiful children.
