He played basketball on scholarship at North Carolina State and New York University (NYU), graduated from NYU with a degree in journalism and briefly played basketball for the St. Louis Hawks. He wrote and edited fiction and non-fiction for national publications including TIME, The Los Angeles Times, Esquire, Life, The New York Times Magazine, Reader's Digest, The Saturday Evening Post and People. His Esquire profile of Mao Tse Tung, "A Day In The Life Of The Chairman," has been translated into a dozen languages, and included in anthologies and university textbooks. He later published original non-fiction and fiction. His "as told to" biography Going Down With Janis remains a best-seller and when the print edition of his novel, California Woman, was originally published it sold approximately a half million copies.

He was a decades-long member of the Screen Actors Guild, acting also in more than a dozen movies, including "The Mountain Men" and "Charley Varrick," and "Hammersmith is Out" with Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor. He also acted in television programs, including "Mrs. Colombo," "Palmerston" and "Buffalo Bill."

He lived in Manhattan, N.Y., Brinmar, PA and Greenwich, CT with his first wife, Antonia Hussey, and moved to Los Angeles, CA in 1969. He and his wife, Leslie, married in 1979. They lived in Los Angeles, Madison, WI and in Cambridge, U.K. (1997-2013) before moving to Salt Lake City, UT. They traveled together to China, dozens of countries in Africa, Central and South America pursuing primate research and new subjects for fiction and non-fiction. They settled in Emigration Canyon, Salt Lake City, UT, surrounded by mountains, deer and birds.

He is survived by his wife of 41 years, Leslie Ann Knapp, his four children, Lauren Visser and her husband Charles Visser, Leslie Knapp, Hunter Knapp, and Andrea Nolan; eight grandchildren; and his sister Rosemary Hornbuckle.
